Remembering My Grandfather, Maciej Sienkiewicz

Recollections of Thomas J. Sienkewicz

My paternal grandfather, Maciej Sienkiewicz, died in 1957, when I was six, so I only have the vaguest memories of him. He was in declining health in those last years, in part because he had suffered a horrible accident at work and one of his arms was completely shattered. No worker’s comp then! He was a factory worker all his life. He had tools in the house for tailoring and shoe repair. Apparently when the accident occurred he was working at some sort of large equipment with a large spinning belt which snapped and broke. My grandfather raised his arm to protect his head. That is how his arm was shattered. If he hadn’t raised his arm he probably would have been killed by a head injury.

He spoke only enough English to tease me and one of the things I remember most about him was the big smile he had on his face when he did.

My grandparents had a dog in the home for many years. In the 1940’s they had a little white dog named Smoochy who died before I was born. The dog I remember was a black German shepherd my father had shipped back from Germany after the war and left with his parents when he got married. My grandfather was very fond of “Blackie” who was so gentle that he actually let me take food out of his mouth.

My grandparents lived in downtown Jersey City near City Hall most of their married lives, but in the early 1950’s, when I was very small, they were living in a basement apartment on a street near Journal Square, near St. John’s Church. This street no longer exists. It was swept away when the St. John’s Apartment highrises were built. My grandparents had to move then, about 1954, to 35 Cottage St., where my grandmother became the custodian of a synagogue and my grandparents lived in a house behind the synagogue. I remember visiting the synagogue itself as well as the yeshiva and being intrigued by the Hebrew writing on the blackboard. The building complex in which this synagogue and my grandparents’ home were located no longer exists. A new synagogue called Congregation Sons of Israel Nusach has replaced it.

The house was two story. On the ground floor was a large kitchen with a black wood-burning stove and a separate dining room. A door in the dining room led into the synagogue complex, first the schule and then the synagogue itself. There was indoor plumbing with a bathroom on ground floor. On the second floor there was a sitting room where my grandparents watched television. I especially remember lots of Lawrence Welk (Polkas!). I also remember watching Shirley Temple films on that little television. There were two bedrooms off the sitting room. One was my grandfather’s, the other my grandmother’s.

My grandparents were parishioners of St. Antony’s of Padua Church in downtown Jersey City, New Jersey’s oldest Polish parish. They were both buried from that church. I remember a priest from that parish coming to visit them in the house on Cottage St. The priest would come at least twice a year, once at Epiphany to bless the house and write K+M+B on the door, in honor of the three kings’ visit (Kasper, Melchior and Balthazar). I saw the same writing on many doors in Belarus during my visit there. The priest also came on Holy Saturday to bless the food my grandmother had laid out for the Easter Sunday meal: colored eggs, ham, salt, kielbasy, cheese, horseradish, a lamb-shaped cake and many other things I don’t remember. All I do remember vividly is that the dining room table was filled with food. On at least one occasion, a priest from St. Antony’s came to bless my grandmother’s apartment on the top floor of our house at 1202 Garden Street in Hoboken, where she moved after my grandfather’s death.

One Easter, in 1955 or 1956, I was given a baby bunny. Since we were living in a fourth floor walk-up at the time, the bunny wound up living with my grandparents. He was there several months until he started eating book covers. After that the bunny disappeared. I was told he went to a farmer, but I suspect his fate led him to a dinner table.

I also remember my grandparents’ Christmas trees, which were always decorated with bubble lights. These lights so fascinated me that I made sure that were on my own family tree as well. There was also a small nativity set under the tree which I remember playing with.
There were only a few books in my grandparents’ house, but I know that they both could read and write. I remember my grandfather reading newspapers both in Polish and in English. The only book I especially remember was a copy of one of Henryk Sienkiewicz’ novels. We knew that we were not related to the author but were still pleased to share his name.

There is a story about our last name. I know this story from my grandmother, not my grandfather. She said that the name was changed from the Polish surname “Sienkiewicz” to the Russian “Brechun” when the Czar’s forces were coming into the village looking for Polish conscripts. She said that the priest changed all the Polish names in the parish registry to Brechun to spare everyone from the Czar. So my grandfather grew up in the old country as a Brechun, but changed his name back to Sienkiewicz when he arrived in America. The spelling of the name varied depending upon the document. The name is spelled “Senkewick” on my grandparents’ marriage certificate, “Senkewicz” in his naturalization papers, and “Sienkewicz” in his obituary. On my grandparents’ tombstone in Holy Name Cemetery in Jersey City the name is spelled Sienkiewicz. Even his first name varied. “Maciej” (“Matthias” in English) was his official, birth name, but this sometimes became, in English, “Macey,” “Macy,” or, even, “Mike” or “Michael”.

Then, when my father Edmund started school, he somehow settled on the spelling “Sienkewicz” and left it that way. Although Polish was spoken in the home, neither my father nor his older sister Rose (whom he always called “Baby”) ever wanted to speak Polish or know much about their heritage. My father could understand when his parents spoke to him in Polish, but refused to answer in the same language. He didn’t want an accent. He wanted to be fully American.

My grandfather’s US records state that he was born on February 24, 1890. He came to the United States just before the Great War. His brother Adolf also emigrated. I am not sure whether they traveled together or separately but they both wound up in the New York area. Despite all efforts, I have not been able to find any record of my grandfather’s or his brother’s arrival in the United States, although they almost surely landed at Ellis Island. Part of the problem here is the name. In the ship manifest and on arrival, did he use the name Brechun or some variant of the name Sienkewicz? And how did the recording official spell that very exotic name? Both brothers, however, listed 1911 as their year of arrival in the United States in US Census documents.

I also remember a visit made to my grandparents’ house on Cottage St. by cousins from Montreal around 1955. Justin Brechun, my grandfather’s nephew, came to visit with his wife Helen. Justin was born in Udelo in 1908 and emigrated to Canada. After World War II he married Helena Poworznik. By then they had a young son, Donald, but I do not remember Donald coming for that visit. Perhaps he was left with other friends or relatives. Justin worked for the Canadian railroad for most of his life. I later visited the Brechuns in Montreal in 1968, when Donald served as my guide to the Montreal Expo.

I do not know the circumstances but my grandfather probably met my grandmother, Rose Celatko, in Richmond, (Staten Island), New York, where her father ran a tavern (according to the census of 1910). Their daughter Rose was born in 1919 but they were not actually married until two years later, when my grandfather was 34 and my grandmother was 17. They were married in Sacred Heart Church in Staten Island on January 28, 1921. Their witnesses were Adolf Sienkiewicz and Mary Celatko, my grandmother’s mother. This event had unfortunate consequences for my grandmother because of the Expatriation Act passed by Congress in 1905, which decreed that any woman who married a non-US citizen automatically lost her citizenship. So my grandmother, who was born in Peekskill, New York, and, therefore a native-born U.S. citizen according to the 14th Amendment to the Constitution, had to reapply for citizenship.
Their son Edmund was born on February 28, 1925. The next year, on May 27, 1926, Maciej (identified here as Macey Senkewicz) became a naturalized citizen of the United States. At the time he and his family were living at 171 Bay St. in Jersey City. (This dwelling no longer exists.) By the time of the 1930 census they were living at 204 York St. (now a vacant lot). In that census his first name is Michael and his occupation is listed as tailor. His year of immigration is recorded as 1911. His American-born wife, Rose, did not regain her American citizenship until February 19, 1941, when she submitted an “Application to Take Oath of Allegiance to the United States Under the Act of June 25, 1936.” By then they were living at 252 York St. in Jersey City.

Application to Take Oath of Allegiance for Rose Celatko Senkewicz
On his draft registration card for World War II Macey Sienkewicz is listed as a worker at the Bakey’s Castor Oil Factory at 90 Morgan St. in Jersey City. On this card, and nowhere else, his middle name is listed as Adolf. It also lists Rusaky as his place of birth.

In March 1957 Maciej suffered a cerebral stroke which caused him to fall and fracture his skull. He was admitted to the Jersey City Medical Center where he died on March 8.

In his obituary in the Jersey Journal he is called Macy Sienkiewicz and his age is listed as 66, putting his birth in 1890. He was described as a 35-year resident of Jersey City and a member of the Polish-American Democratic Club.

For many years, that was about all I knew about my grandfather and his family.

Not many photos of Maciej survive. They are all printed in this memory.
The Family and Descendants of Maciej Sienkiewicz (Brechun)

Maciej Brechun was baptized on February 21, 1887 in Rusaki. He emigrated to America, c.1911-12 and settled in New York / New Jersey, where he took the surname Sienkiewicz. His son Edmund Raymond Sienkewicz was born on February 28, 1925 in Jersey City.

Rose Sienkewicz married John Melsopp in 1950. They had two sons: Brian, b. 12-19-1953 in Hoboken, NJ, (d. 1-28-1998) and Gary, b. c. 1955 in Hoboken, NJ. In or about 1958, Rose and her family moved to San Bernadino, California, where she died on June 1, 2000.

Adolf Sienkiewicz

Adolf was certainly in the United States during World War I because he had a draft card on which Adolf Konstancy Sienkiewicz is listed as a bartender married to Wladyslawa and living at 371 Henderson St. in Jersey City. By the time of the 1920 census they had three daughters. According to the 1930 US Census they lived on 179 Bay St. in Jersey City, not far from my grandparents who were living then at 204 York St. According to this census they had five children, including four girls Helen, Yadwiga (Agnes), Jenny, and Mellie (actually Nellie) and a son named Igasho who died as a young child. Another son, Czelaw (Chester) son was born later that year on Sept. 18, 1920.

I never met my grandfather’s brother Adolf, who died before I was born, but I did meet his wife, Wladyslawa, and many of his children. Oddly, my grandmother always referred to Wladyslawa as Mrs. Sienkiewicz, and that is how I knew her. She always dressed in black. One time I visited her apartment in Jersey City with my grandmother and especially remember the picture she had on the wall depicting the triple division of Poland.

Apparently Adolf was not a very good husband or father and eventually lived apart from his family. According to the 1940 census, they were divorced. I was told, by my grandmother, I think, that he was a skilled accordionist. Adolf was a hotel worker on the New Jersey shore for about fifteen years before his death on April 17, 1946 in Lakewood, NJ, where he was recorded living at the time of the 1940 census. His obituary in the April 18, 1946 issue of the Asbury Park Press says that he was an employee of the Hotel Grossman who survived injuries in a crossing accident in Belmar the year before. He died at Jack’s Bar and Grill while his unnamed daughter was visiting from New York.

When I was about twelve I attended the wedding reception for one of his grandchildren in Jersey City and several years ago I visited, with my sister Toni, his son Chester and his wife Theresa in their retirement home in Central Jersey. On that visit I also met their children, Richard and Theresa. Chester and Theresa were married for 71 years. For most of their lives they lived at 122 Prospect St. in Jersey City. They were life-long members of Our Lady of Czestochowa Parish. He was employed for many years as warehouse superintendent for ACME Supermarkets. Chester died on May 20, 2017 and she followed on December 17, 2017. They had four grandchildren, Patricia, Lori, Judi and Kris and five great grandchildren. Chester’s obituary lists his middle initial as J. (John).

The Family and Descendants of Adolph Sienkiewicz (Brechun)

Adolf Konstancy Sienkiewicz and his wife Wladyslawa (Lottie) had five children: Helen, Yadwiga (Agnes), Jenny, Igasho, Nellie and Czelaw (Chester).

Chester John Sienkiewicz was born on September 18, 1920 in Jersey City NJ. He married Theresa D. Sienkiewicz (nee Szczepanski) in 1943. They had two children Richard John and Theresa. He died on May 20th, 2017.
Searching My Grandfather’s Past

While growing up I knew very little about my grandfather’s childhood and family in the old county. All I remember being told by my grandmother was that he came from “Vilnya,” which I eventually figured out did not mean the city of Vilnius in what is now Lithuania but the region around Vilnius.

On a variety of US documents my grandfather’s birthdate is listed as February 24, 1890. Both he and his brother Adolf listed 1911 as their year of arrival in the United States in US Census documents. He was definitely in the United States by 1919, when my aunt Rose was born, but I knew nothing about his life before that. How did he earn a living as a young man in Vilnya? Why did he decide to emigrate? Where did he get the money for his passage? From what port did he leave? When and where did he arrive in the United States? Whom did my grandfather list as his contact in the United States when he arrived? All of these questions may never be answered.

I have only two things which belonged to my grandfather, his pocket watch (which I was given when I was in high school) and the prayer book which he brought from the Old Country. My son Richard now has the pocket watch. The front of the prayer book is inscribed with this notice written in Polish and translated here into English by my Canadian cousin Donald Brechun:

This book
Belongs to Maciej Sinkowicz, please do not in any case
Please give it back, I will thank you, and I will thank that person, and give it back to the Udelo parish

Signed by priest
Marsal Jancewicz

Particularly significant about this inscription is the fact that the surname Sinkowicz is used because it shows that my grandfather used this name before he came to the United States. Does this mean that my grandfather used the Polish surname even in Russia or did Fr. Jancewicz write that name knowing that my grandfather would revert to that name when he left Russia? The inscription in the prayer book is also important because it mentions that my grandfather belonged to the Udelo parish.
In my grandfather’s youth, Udelo was in Czarist Russia. After World War I the area surrounding Udelo became part of the new state of Poland. In 1939, when Poland was invaded by Germany from the west and the Soviet Union from the east, Udelo came under Soviet control. It remained part of the Soviet Union until the collapse of Communism when Byelorussia or Belorussia (i.e. “White Russia”), as the country was once known, broke away from the Soviet Union in 1991 and became the independent nation known today as Belarus.
Parish life in Udelo has long centered around the Catholic Church of the Immaculate Conception of the Virgin Mary, a monument of late Baroque and Neo-classici architecture. Here in 1642 Yazep Korsak founded a Franciscan monastery. At first the buildings were wooden, but by the end of the 18th century a stone church was built. After a fire in the early 19th century, the church was significantly rebuilt in the style of late classicism. As is common in this area, the bell-tower is not attached to the church building but was built in front of the church. During the Communist period, the church was used for grain storage. After the fall of the Soviet Union, the building was reconsecrated. The inside of the church is actually very plain. There are only a few religious statues. The Franciscans still serve this church, although the priests come as missionaries from Poland. In modern Belarus, Orthodoxy is the state religion and the Orthodox church is supported with state funds. Catholic churches receive no such public support and rely on the generosity of the parishioners. (So church collections in the United States designated for the Church in Eastern Europe fill a great need.)
Having a paper accepted for a conference in Vilnius scheduled for May 2018 prompted me to contact my cousin Donald in Canada and we began to talk about our families and compare notes. He was uncertain exactly how we were related but I was pretty sure, based upon what I remembered, that we shared the same paternal great-grandparents and were second cousins.

The first problem was our surnames. How could a Brechun and a Sienkewicz be related through male lines? Donald, too, had heard the story of a name change in the family, but his version was different from mine. According to his family tradition, the local priest changed the name to Brechun (meaning “liar”) because he was angry with one of our ancestors. Exactly how did the names get changed and why do members of the same family now have different surnames?

There were other questions. Donald has several times visited the town of Udelo, where his father Justin had been born and returned to live at the end of his life. Justin died and was buried there in 1976. On his visits to Udelo Donald had met many members of his father’s family who lived in the village all their lives and none of them knew anything about other relatives in the United States. Nor did the family in Udelo remember anything about a name change until they heard it from North America. There were only Brechuns in Udelo, no Sienkiewicz living in Udelo or buried in the local cemeteries. All the relatives in Udelo were descendants of Donald’s grandfather, Bronislaw Brechun.

The Meaning of the Name “Brechun”

Brechun is apparently of Russian or Ukrainian origin. According to Svetlana Romanchuk, there are two versions of the name Brechun. Both have similar negative connotations:

1. The nickname Brechun goes back to the verb "brechacj" - "to bark, bark as a dog", "to lie, lie", "to brag", "slander", "to shout, rustle", "to swear, quarrel". Brechunom (or Brechom) in old times quite often called the shouter and also the person who speaks much, likes to embellish the story, to invent.
2. From 'brechacj' to tell empty.

In Czarist Russia authorities apparently referred to called a kramolnik, the rebel as a brechom.

Despite its negative meaning, Brech was a very widespread personal name given to children. At the same time Brekh could, at the discretion the individual, become his official or documentary surname.

The Meaning of the Name “Sienkiewicz”

Sienkiewicz is of Polish origin and means “son of Sienko (or little Simon)”. Its patronymic form suggests that it is related to the nobility. Several variant spellings of this name are used in family records, including Sienkiewicz, Sienkewicz, Ziemkiewicz, and Zemkevich.
The Family of Bronislaw Brechun

Donald knew that his paternal grandfather Bronislaw Brechun (1875/8-1966) lived in Udelo and had four children. In addition to Justin, the oldest who emigrated to Canada, there were two other sons, Antonio and Josef, and one daughter, Anell, all of whom stayed in Udelo. Antonio married a woman named Jadwiga and they had a daughter named Donusia. During or shortly after World War II Antonio fled to Gdansk, Poland, where he married again and had a son named Ian. Donusia stayed in Udelo, married Ivan Romanchuk and had four daughters, Tanya, Valentine, Olga and Nicola. Donusia, now widowed and still in Udelo, is severely crippled by a stroke. Ian lives in Poland and has three daughters, Malgorzata, Agnieszka, and Natalia.

Josef Brechun (1912-1971) married Maria Kushnervich and had two daughters, Maria and Nina. Maria’s husband is named Stanislaw. They had two children, Andrey and Valentina. Nina married Anton Brechun and they also had two children, Nicolai and Natalia.

Justin’s sister, Anell, was born in 1911 and it was to Anell that Justin Brechun went from Canada to live at the end of his life. She married Justin Romanchuk and had four children, Leonid, Frank, Antonio and Elena. She died in 1984.

Anell’s children all lived or still live in Udelo. Her son Leonid died in 1985 and left a wife named Sofia and two children, Anton and Valentina. Her son Frank died in 2017 and left a wife named Helena and two children, Tamara and Sasha. A third son, Anton, is still alive. His wife is named Ada and they have one daughter, Svetlana. Anell’s daughter Alina married Ivan Sliski. They have one daughter, Tanya, whose husband is named Andrei. I stayed with Anton and Ada when I visited Udelo.
How Were Bronislaw Brechun and the Sienkiewicz brothers related?

The big question was how my grandfather Maciej and his brother Adolf fit or did not fit into this family.

I did have two photos which Justin sent to my grandfather. (The originals are now in the possession of his son Donald.) On one photo, dated, July 9, 1931, he wrote in Latin script a mix of Polish and Russian phonetic words translated as “I am sending my photograph for your keepsake to my beloved grandpa. J.Brechun” On the second photo he wrote “I am sending you my photograph in remembrance. Justyna Brechun.” The word used for Grandpa could really mean uncle, so this was yet another suggestion that my grandfather was the uncle of Donald’s father Justin, and therefore the brother of Bronislaw Brechun of Udelo.

Translation of inscription

July 9, 1931. I am sending my photograph for your keepsake to my beloved grandpa.

J.Brechun

Justin Brechun (l) and Boleslaw Los (r.), who also came from Belarus, from a village near the town of Vitebsk. They were good lifelong friends in Canada.
I also had an important piece of information in my possession: my grandparents’ marriage certificate which included the names of my grandfather’s parents, Joseph Sienkiewicz and Appelone Simko. This information proved to be the missing link we needed. Donalt send those names to Svetlana Romanchuck in Belarus who checked records in Minsk, where reference to the marriage of Joseph to Appelone was recorded. At the time of his marriage in 1870, Joseph’s surname was recorded as Ziemkiewicz but four years later, when the birth of their daughter Jadviga was recorded, it was Brechun. Their son Maciej (my grandfather) was born on February 21, 1887, in the little village of Rusaki, a few kilometers from Udelo, where the Catholic Church is located. The record lists his surname as Brechun, not Sienkiewicz.

So we finally had not only firm proof of the name change, but we now knew that it occurred between 1870 and 1874. However, we may never know exactly why the change occurred or why the two brothers who emigrated, born as Brechun, changed their names to Sienkiewicz after they arrived in the United States.

Furthermore, records were also found recording the death of Joseph in 1908 and then the death of Appelone in 1912, with three sons listed Bronislaw, Maciej and Adolf, plus a daughter, Jadviga. In other documents we were able to trace Joseph’s birth back to c.1850 and learned that his father’s name was Felix, born on February 1, 1823.

One puzzling feature of these documents is that my grandfather’s baptismal date is listed as February 21, 1887 while his birthdate is recorded in U.S. documents as February 24, 1890.

Translation of Inscription:
I am sending you my photograph in remembrance.

Justyna Brechun
February 24th is the feast day of St. Maciej (Matthias in English), so my grandfather may have preferred to celebrate his name day instead of his birthday. The discrepancy in the year is more mysterious. Could the difference in dates be due in part to the fact that the Julian calendar was still used in Russia at that time? But there is also a three year difference between these records.

Apparently Adolf and Maciej emigrated to the United State in 1911, three years after the death of their father and a year before their mother died. Why did they emigrate? Perhaps their elder brother Bronislaw inherited the family house in Rusaki. With no future in the village and the area under the harsh rule of Czarist Russia, the two brothers emigrated. It is unclear whether they left together or separately but the two brothers definitely lived in close proximity when they arrived in New York.

Although my grandfather fortunately stayed in touch with his nephew Justin Brechun in Montreal, no one in Maciej’s or Adolf’s families ever talked about contacts in the Old Country. Similarly, while the family of Bronislaw stayed in contact with Justin, Bronislaw’s son, no one in Udelo had any memory of Bronislaw’s two brothers who emigrated to the United States. The turmoil caused by two World Wars and many political changes would certainly have discouraged such contact. Whatever the reasons for this break in communication during the 20th century, it is rewarding to have restored that broken contact a century later. I am very grateful to my Canadian cousin Donald Brechun for his help in restoring all these family connections.

The Bre(c)hun / Ziemkiewicz / Brechun Family of Rusaki

Here is a summary of family records preserved in Minsk, Belarus (provided in appendix). Thanks to Svetlana Romanchuk for researching this information.

Note: Since the dates below come from documents recorded in Czarist Russia, they are probably based upon the Julian calendar. To determine the date according to the Gregorian calendar, add 11 days, so February 5, 1806 would be February 16, 1806.

Josef Brehun

On February 5, 1806, Josef Brehun, a young man, and Elisabeta Brekhunovna, peasants from the village of Rusaki were married. Their daughter, Ursula, was baptized on November 3, 1806. She died on August 16, 1807. Their daughter Margaret was baptised on August 18, 1808 (and probably died in 1815-16). A daughter named Josaphat was born on March 4, 1811. A son named Stanislav was baptised on November 6, 1813. A son named Alexander was baptized on April 10, 1815.
On June 16, 1818 their daughter named Antonia was baptized. But now the parents bear the surname Zemkevich instead of Brehun. So a change of surname from Brehun to Zemkevich occurred sometime between 1815 and 1818.

Felix Ziemkiewicz (or Zemkevich)
On February 1, 1823 Felix, son of Joseph and Elizabeth Ziemkiewicz, was baptized.

On November 9, 1841 The peasant Felix Zemkevich, a young man of 20 years old from the village of Rusakov and Iozofata Zemkevich, a girl of 19 years old from the village of Shoti, were married.

Their son Joseph Ziemkiewicz (later Brechun) was born c.1850.

Joseph Ziemkiewicz (or Zenkevich, later Brechun)
On October 25, 1870, the peasants Iosif Zenkevich, a young man of 20 years old from the village of Rusakov, married Apolion Shimkovna (Appolone Siemko), a girl of 18 years. Parents of the groom: peasants Felix and Iozefat from Zenkevichi Zenkevichi, lawful spouses.

Four years later, on December 27, 1874, when their child Ludwig a(Yadviga), was baptized, the parents are referred to as Joseph and Apolonia from Shimkov Brekhunov, lawful spouses born in the village of Rusak.

So a second name change (from Ziemkiewicz/Zenkevich to Brekhun) occurred sometime between 1870 and 1874.

Their son Bronislaw was baptized on January 7, 1878 in Rusaki (died in Udelo in 1966)
Their daughter Frantishka was baptized on October 7 1880 in Rusaki (died January 2, 1882)
Their son Adolph was baptized on January 1, 1883 in Rusaki (emigrated to America, c.1911-12. died April 17, 1946, in Lakewood, NJ)
Their son Dioniziy was baptized on June 24, 1885 in Rusaki (died January 23, 1886)
Their son Maciej was baptized on February 21, 1887 in Rusaki. (emigrated to America, c.1911-12; died March 8, 1957 in Jersey City, NJ)
Their son Zenon was baptized on December 7, 1889 in Rusaki (died March 15, 1890)
Their daughter Emilia, was baptized on October 17, 1891 in Rusaki (died December 2, 1892)
Their daughter Marianna was baptized on April 30, 1894 in Rusaki (probably dead by 1908)
Their son Yctin was baptized on August 25, 1896 in Rusaki (probably dead by 1908)
Joseph died on March 31, 1908. His survivors included his wife Appolone, three sons, Bronislaw, Adolf, and Maciej and his daughter Jadviga. Since no mention of Marianna and Yctin are included in the Minsk records, their deaths are not included in the Minsk records.

Appolone Brechun died January 16, 1912. The same children are listed as her survivors.
Since there is no memory of Jadwiga within the family in Udelo, she may have died during the Great War (1914-1918) or its aftermath (which must have been a difficult time in the area around Udelo), and no written record of her death was made. But some relatives with a different surname lived in Luck-Mosarski. Bronislaw’s sister may have married and changed her name to either Girstun or Dulinec. Further research needs to be done in that regard.

Bronislaw stayed in Rusaki/Udelo and kept the name Brechun.

Adolf and Maciej took the name Sienkiewicz when they emigrated to the United States, c.1911.

The Polish–Lithuanian Commonwealth

The Polish–Lithuanian Commonwealth, a federation of the Polish Kingdoms and the Grand Duchy of Lithuania, resulted from the Lublin union in 1569 and included territories of modern Poland, Ukraine, Belarus and Lithuania as well as parts of modern Russia, Latvia and Moldova. This map of the Commonwealth of the year 1650, shows that it at that time it was the largest empire in Europe. The Commonwealth was liquidated in 1795 with the partition of the state between Russia, Prussia and Austria. Wilno province where Rusaki is located became part of Czarist Russia. When Justin Brechun would fill out forms in Canada, he would always say he was born in Wilno province, Poland. Maciej Sienkiewicz also said he was from Vilnya.
This map shows the Grand Duchy of Lithuania, which was part of the Commonwealth. Rusaki was part of the Grand Duchy of Lithuania. The yellow color indicates the Kingdom of Poland part of the Commonwealth.

The Commonwealth also included all of today’s Western Ukraine. During one of his visits to Belarus, Donald Brechun visited a woman who mentioned that there were many people by the name Brechun in western Ukraine! Svetlana Romanchuk has also spoken to this woman who suggested that the name Brekhuna appeared (extended) in our area after the revolt of Bogdana Chmelnickogo in 1651-1654. This revolt (called in the Soviet and modern Russian historiography the National liberation war of Bogdan Khmelintsky and Liberating war of Ukrainian and Beloruskogonarod was a large-scale armed revolt of Cossacks of Army Zaporizhia, supported by peasants and citizens, against the government of the Polish-Lithuanian Commonwealth. These forces captured lands of the Kiev, Chernihiv, Bratslavsky and Podolsk voivodeships of Corona Polskaya and also the Smolensk, Minsk, Beresteytsky and Mstislawsky voivodeships of the Grand Duchy of Lithuania. It was conducted under the slogans of release from social, national and religious oppression. This revolt is the subject of With Fire and Sword (Ogniem i mieczem, 1884), the first book in Henryk Sienkiewicz’ famous historical trilogy. In Sienkiewicz’ novel Khmelnytsky is called Hmyelnitzki and received a somewhat negative portrayal as a rebel fighting against the Commonwealth and Sienkiewicz’ Polish and Lithuanian heroes.
Svetlana Romanchuk notes that the uprising affected the province of Wilno and hypothesizes that some of Bogdan Khmelnytsky’s Cossacks could have settled in the village and given the name Brechun to our ancestors. For example, a Cossack may have fallen in love with and married a local peasant woman.

After the Partition of 1795

The years following the partition of 1795 were difficult ones.

It is possible that the ancestral Brechuns started in western Ukraine, somewhere around Lwow (Lviv). The history of Lwow (Lviv) shows there was much poverty for the peasants, and that there was a great migration by the peasants to other parts of Europe in the 1800s. So, our ancestors could have started in western Ukraine and migrated to Wilno (Belarus).

The earliest known record of a Brehun in Russaki is when Josef Brehun, a young man, and Elisabeta Brekhunovna, peasants from the village of Rusaki were married on February 5, 1806. By June 16, 1818, when their daughter named Antonia was baptized, their surname has changed to Zemkevich instead of Brehun. This period was a tumultuous one. Napoleon led his disastrous March to Moscow through the area in 1812 and was received enthusiastically as a liberator.

It is also known that the village of Rusaki at some point became the property of the church under the jurisdiction of a bishop named Zenkiewicz. So the name change from Josef Brehun to Josef Zenkevich around 1818 may be religious in origin. Information from the Lithuanian archives shows that the name change probably occurred during the tenure of the village monastery in Rusaki Udzel. If the name Brechun (Liar) is a result of the uprising of Bohdan Khmelnytsky, the Cossacks were mostly Orthodox. Orthodoxy was and is still the dominant religion in a large part of modern Ukraine, Russia and Belarus. Perhaps the change of name to Senkevich was made in order to bring the peasants to the Catholic Church, because Senkevich is a more Polish name.

The second name change (from Ziemkiewicz/Zenkevich to Brekhun) occurred sometime between 1870 and 1874 and is more difficult to explain. It may be connected with events following Tsar Alexander’s decree of 1865 freeing serfs from the landowners. This liberation did not happen right away, as news travelled slowly. In many localities the peasants refused to believe that the Tsar’s manifesto was genuine. There were often troubles, and troops had to be called in to disperse the angry crowds. Although the free peasants could obtain a grant of land, they had to pay tax on this land. So all the grain and crops went to pay the tax, leaving the peasants almost starving. In many localities there were revolts of the peasants against the tax and against the authorities. (See Pushkarev, Sergei G (April 1968). “The Russian Peasants’ Reaction to the Emancipation of 1861”. Russian Review. Hoboken, NJ: Wiley-Blackwell. 27 (2): 199–214.) Many peasants were imprisoned for as agitators and troublemakers – and this is, perhaps, where Justin Brechun’s story of a name change makes sense, that the name was changed to Brechun to indicate that it was a family of troublemakers.

The other family version, remembered by the family of Maciej Sienkiewicz, can also make some sense in this context. During these tumultuous times there may have been a fear among the local peasants of conscription by the Czarist government and the local priest may have forged name changes from Polish to Russian to protect the villages from such forced labor.
But why were the Sienkiewicz brothers known by this Polish name in the United States when they were baptized as Brechun in Rusaki? The answer may lie in religious and ethnic loyalty. Although the Russian authorities in the Belarusian lands wanted to strangle and destroy everything Polish, for their own safety and to establish power on the conquered land they were afraid of uprisings. Even in Orthodox Russia the authorities simply could not take away the Polish name Senkevich and replace with a Russian name like Brehun.

So, in whatever way and for whatever reason the name was changed from Senkevich to Brechun officially in 1870-1874. the Church in Udzelo remained Catholic and the priests and the people remembered the name Senkevich. This explains the inscription on the page of Maciej Sienkiewicz’s prayer book. Only by adherence to the Catholic faith can the assumption of the name Sienkiewicz by Adolf and Macej Brechun make sense as they left Rusaki for the United States.

But their brother Bronislaw remained in Czarist Rusaki, had to obey the authorities, and could not retake the name Senkevich. He had to put up with the name, which was imposed by the authorities.

So it seems that our family name started as Brechun, was changed to Zenkiewicz, and then changed back to Brechun. The Brechuns who emigrated to the United States changed their names to Sienkiewicz even though they had been baptized as Brechun while the Brechuns who remained in Rusaki/Udello kept that name.
Donald Brechun created this genealogy before more detailed family research in 2018 traced family records back to Bronislaw’s parents and confirmed the connection between the Brechuns and the Sienkewicz branches.

One thing I can tell you for sure, my father was never named Igasho or Ignacio. I have attached a copy of his birth certificate that shows his birth name as Ceslaw. They spelled it incorrectly on the birth certificate. It should have been Czeslaw. My father would have had a brother along with his four sisters but unfortunately he died either at birth or soon after. I will see if I can get his name from the cemetery office or maybe off the monument. Maybe his brother had that other name?

My father and I share the middle name of John.

His four sisters were, Agnes, Helen, Nellie and Jenny.
