

The Monmouth College Department of Classics
presents
the Thirtieth Annual Bernice L. Fox Classics Lecture

Classics Now!

by

W. Robert Connor

Former President of the National Humanities Center

Former President of the Teagle Foundation

wrconnor1@gmail.com

www.wrobertconnor.com

American society, economy and education have been on a roller-coaster ride in recent years. Many of the changes have put new pressure on liberal arts and sciences, the humanities and the classics in particular. How has liberal education fared and how can its future be secured? The lecture will present reasons for guarded optimism, and suggestions for actions that can make a difference.

7:30 P.M.

Monday, March 2, 2015

Pattee Auditorium

Center for Science & Business 100

Monmouth College, Monmouth, Illinois

This lecture series was established in 1985 to honor Dr. Bernice L. Fox, who taught Classics at Monmouth College from 1947 until 1981. The goal of this series is to illustrate the continuing importance of Classical studies in the modern world and the intersection of the Classics with other disciplines in the liberal arts.